You'll laugh, you'll cry, you feel everything that he expresses, right along with him, as he amuses you with tales of his magical childhood through the current season in his life; some of the unforgettable characters who made up his family growing up are now gone and a few remain, and the highs, lows, and lessons of his life will cause you to visit your own dust from the attic. From the opening pages, it was an engaging and fun read. The author takes us on the journey of his life, starting with his childhood in Brooklyn as the son of a large Catholic Italian family. The book is a series of funny stories, along with life lessons learned along the way, as he marries his high school sweetheart, raises a family and builds a successful career. Reading this book is like sitting down over coffee with a good friend, and reminiscing about the stories that shape us into who we've become. I highly recommend this book if you're looking for a light and fun read.

If someone asked you what you did to get where you are today, what would you tell them? Author Bill Carpentier gives us his take as he looks back over his life with a critical eye and great comic timing. He tells tales of growing up in an Italian family in Brooklyn in the 1950s (even including a recipe for egg creams), training for the Navy (during one winter on the Great Lakes), and trying to be "present" for his kids (while having to handle emergencies long distance). Don't worry, though, his wife was always there to help him or at least to tell him what she had already done on his behalf. The tales of soccer "coaching" will resonate with anyone who has played (or watched) a little league sport, while the stories from the road (both his stories, and those of his staff) are sure to connect to everyone in business. With a little something for everyone - not to mention a keen look at some foibles we all share - this Dust from the Attic won't soon be getting swept under the rug."
