Sei W. Nyaquoiyeabar : Gathering Stones Where Night Caught Us before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Gathering Stones Where Night Caught Us:

A satirical novel about the first Liberian civil war and its political aftermath based on the author's harrowing experiences and fortuitous survival. Strong anti-war, civil rights, and gender rights messages enhance its universal appeal.

About the Author Sei. W. Nyaquoiyeabar was born and lives in the Republic of Liberia. A talented storyteller of fiction and local history, he wrote "Gathering Stones Where Night Caught Us," his debut novel, inspired by his unforgettable experiences during the first Liberian civil war. Caught in the midst of rebels in Nimba County, Nyaquoiyeabar kept day-to-day notes about political and guerilla activities from the outset of the conflict until it ended. With humor and biting satirical prose, he deftly captured the harsh reality that average citizens faced at the mercy of military and political leaders. He also crafted strong anti-war, civil rights, and gender rights themes that speak loudly to everyone. Nyaquoiyeabar, a dedicated high school chemistry teacher, has taught science and math for many years at the Ganta United Methodist Mission High School in Nimba County. A family man, community leader, and inventor, he has designed and built a compressor used by farmers to extract oil from palm nuts. Nyaquoiyeabar has a forthcoming title, "Under the Palm Tree Education" (2011).
