I don't hate them it's just that they are so cold sometimes ...By Julius ZRight from the get-go I'll admit, I'm an animal lover but I'm not fond to cats, I mean, I don't hate them it's just that they are so cold sometimes and I don't likethem. This is not a warning from me to not like this book, because it is the totalopposite.This is a charming book and the story is amazing, to be such simple andcartoony, the story-telling and the pace are very well handled, the author didn't take anything for granted, and as I was reading it to my goddaughter I often stopped and laugh because I too, was entertained by it. To be considered a children's book, it can easily be enjoyed for all ages, I recommend it myself, even though I was expecting some lame jokes, it didn't happen, the dialogue was also exciting and intriguing. I hope in the near future this will become a cartoon series, Ginger definitely has the lead and interesting personality.

By quirru Ginger the Gangster Cat by Frank Kusy it is a lovely book about a feral cat, Ginger that meets a house cat Sparky and thinks he can get an advantage of him, he finds his way into the house and the adventures start. What amazes me more is that the author knows cat behavior, cat thinking, and cat way of getting what they want...hahaha he is a cat lover just like me. I enjoyed this novel a lot, each phrase I read I was seeing one of my cats doing almost exactly what the author describes and I was thinking...oh well, now I know why cats do this or do that. The book is well written, it has characters very well described, not only cats but humans too, and most of all he really catches the essence of the cats and has a very nice and particular way of describing them that make me laugh all the way till the end.

"Ginger the Gangster Cat" is a book for children at any age and why not anyone who likes reading and having fun. This very good story was written by Frank Kusy, aspiring Buddhist and incorrigible cat lover. The story is very entertaining and my niece and nephew enjoyed it from beginning to end, and keep on asking me to read it to them again. The full color cover is also a good point; children get fascinated by it at first sight. It is not only a child story but it also has humor in it; children as well as adults end up laughing, trust me... I found myself laughing non-stop. It was quite fun! I would certainly recommend reading this lovely story to everybody but specially to animal lovers as they will find in this book something great, and I am eager to keep on reading something more from Kusy.

About the Author FRANK KUSY is an aspiring Buddhist and incorrigible cat lover. He wrote his first cat book when he was eight. It was called 'Jessie the Cat' and even his mum liked it. There followed 'Toad's Dilemma' (a sequel to Frank's all time fave kid's book, 'The Wind in the Willows') and a whole host of similarly derivative anthropomorphic master-pieces. Only after a short affair with journalism in his 20's did he write anything with a human being in it (the Financial Times insisted upon it), and only after he went to India, aged 30, did he stop writing about cats (he only saw one in India). Frank's first published book (1986) was a travelogue on India – now re-released on as Kevin and I in India. There followed a slew of Asian travel guides – India, Thailand, Burma, Indonesia etc – but none of them paid very much and the last one gave him a ten-year writing block: he simply couldn't decide which Delhi hotel had the best bath-room, the Taj Intercontinental or the Oberoi. Frank returned to writing after breaking his leg in 2005 – his wife nagged him into it. And the first thing they penned together was...another cat book. Thus came into being 'Ginger the Gangster Cat', the story of one fat cat's devotion to Spanish cuisine. For anyone interested, Sparky – their 5-year old perennial kitten and Ginger's shy and nervous sidekick – is real. He really is the cutest cat in the universe. Ginger himself is a composite of every stray tom-cat Frank has had in the past, absolute terrors all of them!
