John Birmingham : He Died With a Felafel in His Hand before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised He Died With a Felafel in His Hand:

0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. okay, but not for meBy Clay Everetta little all over the place. for once, the movie was better than the book. it gave me a headache to read because I can hear his fast paced talking. for sure more of a book for young men not ladies in their 40s like me. But again loved the film.0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. It's a definite recommend of the true story of funBy Nicole W.Got this for my son when he first moved into a roommate-filled bachelor pad. It's a definite recommend of the true story of fun, painful, funny tales of a bunch of blokes and shielas who lived in an aussie pad. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Finally! By Roger The Rhino Ross I'm a big fan of John Birmingham and am glad that his publishers have finally made this available in the U.S. Fans of Birmos Axis of Time trilogy or After America and Without Warning might be surprised by this. It is hilarious and crosses cultures. Highly recommended for anyone who appreciates Hunter Thompson and other gonzo authors.

These hilarious tales of urban terror reveal the dark truth hidden behind three seemingly innocent words—a phrase that you have seen a hundred times before but will never view in the same light again—WANTED TO SHARE. John Birmingham's rendering of a life in share houses will leave you laughing, cringing and reminiscing about your own brushes with the mad, bad residents of flate mate hell.

About the Author John Birmingham was born on August 7th, 1964 in Liverpool in the United Kingdom. His parents migrated with him to Australia in 1970, and settled in Ipswich, Queensland. He attended the University of Queensland in Brisbane and obtained an Arts degree. After graduating he moved to Canberra to undertake fulltime employment with the Department of Defence, however he disliked working in Canberra so he returned to Queensland and decided to become a writer. He lived in a lot of sharehousing during the following period. In 2002 he won Australia's National Prize For Non-Fiction for Leviathan. He currently lives in Brisbane.
