phone notes. These messages reflect our common humanity as we express our concern about our most precious possessions, our children and their life issues. I hope he has more anecdotes to share with us. 1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Great job. Very realistic. By Bill Parsons As a former school administrator for Health, Physical Education and Athletics, this book has inspired me to write a book on some of the most interesting and amusing written notes from parents excusing their child from physical education classes.

This book is a tongue in cheek look at some of the real phone calls handled by the nursing staff of a busy pediatric office. For the most part they are cute and reflect the extreme anxiety that goes along with early parenting experiences. This is in no way meant to poke fun at the callers who were quite serious about their calls. As parents, we have all been there.
