someone who sees things a little differently, but with a good foundation of faith. 2 of 2 people found the following review helpful. A devotional of a different color
By Joleene Naylor I've been waiting for this book to come out for awhile, so I was happy to finally get it! Shades of Plaid is a weekly devotional but, as the title implies, this is not your average devotional. Instead of the usually serious, inspiring, tear inducing stories, Shades of Plaid has fifty-two humorous short stories, followed up by serious, inspiring lessons that can be applied to most any Christian faith, whether you're Episcopalian, Baptist, or a denomination in between. In Shades of Plaid, Jonathan Harvey has shown that being a Christian not only can be fun, but is fun! And even if you're not interested in the devotional aspect, the short stories are funny by themselves. In fact, you don't even have to take a whole year to read it. I devoured it in two days.

By AMY WILSON I love this book! I would recommend it to anyone for some lighthearted laughter paired with heartwarming reminders of God's love and devotion to us. It is well written and flows nicely, without grammatical errors to detract from its content. Did I mention that I really like this book?

Shades of Plaid was written with the sole purpose of influencing the course of history, providing people the answers to all of life's riddles, and arming its readers with the power to handle every situation they face with ease... Having failed miserably at this, the book has moved to "Plan B". Now, it's just going for the laugh and it hopes to cause the reader to think of God. (It's important to note that the book does not cause readers to laugh about God, because that might be considered disrespectful.) All in all, it's a pretty clever little book.

About the Author
Throughout history men have answered the question, "So, can you tell me a little about yourself?" with a simple statement of who they are and where they work. Jonathan Harvey is not going to do that because he thinks it would be boring. Besides, he doesn't define himself by his current occupation. Jonathan Harvey lives in Kingsland Georgia, and he wants you to know that he is an amazing fellow. What makes him so amazing is not his amazing sense of fashion, although that may be a small part of it. What makes him an amazing fellow is the amazing life that he leads. He is one of the few people on the planet who can honestly say that he has done everything that he said he wanted to do as he was growing up. He's also done a lot of things that he didn't want to do, but he doesn't like to dwell on that kind of stuff. Surprisingly enough, he's still found time to watch many hours of quality television. When he was young, he wanted to act. Today, he's not a movie star but he's done community theater and standup comedy. He's even performed comic skits on public access television. When he was young, he was inspired by a teacher and decided he wanted to teach. Since then, he's taught Sunday school and has been a children's minister. Also, he's had the grand opportunity of conducting training at work. When he was young, he wanted to be a writer. He writes a daily pseudo-inspirational™ email and blog that many people read. He also writes an online comic, The Terrible Turtle Conspiracy, with his friend Joleene Naylor. The comic is updated every Friday. He also wrote this book, and now that it's published he hopes to become a big "Book Star". Finally when he was young, he wanted to become a ruthless vampire hunter, although he has a sneaky suspicion that this might never happen. However, he does find comfort in the fact that he's accomplished three of four life goals.
